Faith, Social Media, and Polarization

An Off-the-Record Conversation with National Leaders

In this time of unprecedented and dangerous division, social media and technology continue to play a significant role in dividing Americans, fueling misinformation, and even radicalizing people toward extremism and violence.

As religious leaders, we see these dynamics playing out in our communities, and in some cases, tearing our congregations or communities apart. We have a role to play in building a moral response to this crisis and equipping our communities to be resilient to the toxic impacts of technology.

Join us for a private, off-the-record conversation about these topics with other national religious leaders.

We will hear from leading experts on technology, discuss its impact, share what we are experiencing and hearing from our own constituents and communities, and define potential opportunities for collaboration and action.

Travel costs for invitees provided by the One America Movement.
